

Disclaimer for IANM Examinations Preparation

The CCOS(C) does not control the content of, nor does it have a role in setting, the International Academy of Neuromusculoskeletal Medicine (IANM) Diplomate examinations for the subspecialty of Orthopaedics. The requirements to become a Fellow of CCOS(C) include passing the IANM examinations, but the completion of courses, materials, and placements presented as necessary for fulfilling the requirements to become a Fellow of CCOS(C) are not guaranteed to cover all content testable in the IANM examinations, nor are they guaranteed to cover content in the manner in which the IANM will examine for correctness of any testable knowledge. The CCOS(C) program is not designed as an examination preparation course, rather as a clinical training program for Canadian chiropractic orthopaedic specialists. It is the responsibility of the candidate to ensure that the candidate knows the expectations of the IANM examinations; the IANM website is <https://ianmmedicine.org/>. The candidate understands that to cover all materials potentially available for examination by the IANM will require self-directed study by the candidate. Any candidate for Fellowship in the CCOS(C) who does not successfully pass the IANM examination will not hold the CCOS(C) liable for the costs or consequences of any such failure, nor hold the CCOS(C) responsible for any failure to have taught any content tested on the IANM examinations, nor hold the CCOS(C) responsible for any failure to have taught any content in the manner in which the IANM tests knowledge for correctness.
